State Administration Council Chairman Prime Minister Senior General Min Aung Hlaing addresses the National Economic Development Coordination Meeting in Nay Pyi Taw yesterday.

Chairman of the State Administration Council Prime Minister Senior General Min Aung Hlaing delivered a speech at the National Economic Development Coordination Meeting held yesterday afternoon at the meeting hall of the State Administration Council Chairman's Office in Nay Pyi Taw.

The Chairman of the State Administration Council and Prime Minister began the meeting with opening remarks, emphasizing that agriculture and livestock are the backbone of the country's

MSME support aims to boost national economy and exports

Research activities will drive progress in the production of essential crops for the country and will significantly contribute to national economic development.

Salient points from the address delivered by the Senior General at the National Economic Development Coordination Meeting:

ENHANCING agricultural and livestock production will lead to the development of the national economy.

Successfully implementing agricultural and livestock enterprises will greatly contribute to rural development and poverty reduction.

Cotton and bamboo have been prioritized and promoted as key industries to help drive national economic growth.

In supporting MSMEs, priority should be given to using locally sourced raw materials to enhance product quality and increase export capacity.

economy. He stressed the importance of increasing the production of staple food items such as rice, cooking oil, meat, and fish to ensure stable and affordable food prices.

He reiterated the government's commitment to developing agro-based and livestock-based manufacturing industries and highlighted the need to build on the country's strong foundations in these sectors to boost productivity. Although oil crops like peanuts, sesame, sunflower, and soybeans are being cultivated, the country still lacks self-sufficiency in edible oil, leading to continued reliance on imports. Therefore, he underscored the need for sustained efforts to achieve self-sufficiency in oil production.

A country's economy is typically measured by its GDP. In the 2024-2025 financial year, our GDP was recorded at US$76.4 billion. For the 2025-2026 financial year, it is projected to reach $81.6 billion, with a targeted increase of approximately $5.2 billion. While reviewing these figures, we noted that the World Bank had initially projected Myanmar's economic growth at 2.5 per cent. However, it has now revised its forecast, predicting a potential contraction of up to -2.5 per cent. He said this revision is based on inaccurate and

Boosting domestic production and exports key to food security and equitable economic growth

WE need to place special emphasis on promoting domestic production to ensure food security. Additionally, we must focus on boosting foreign income by increasing the production of export-oriented goods. As the national economy grows, the socioeconomic well-being of the people will improve, leading to equitable development across regions and states, in alignment with the country’s economic policy aspirations.

Residents Urged to Prioritize Public Safety Amid Armed Terrorist Threats

ARMED terrorists have been launching attacks by using residential homes and administrative buildings in towns and villages as cover, where they have forcibly settled. They aim to shield themselves from Tatmadaw counterattacks while also persuading temporarily displaced persons to return to their native areas and recruiting new members. That enables terrorists to use civilians as human shields. Tatmadaw is committed to safeguarding the sovereignty of the State and will respond to these threats based on intelligence and prevailing conditions. Therefore, residents in areas where terrorists have taken control must prioritize their safety and protect themselves from being exploited by these groups.

incomplete data. What matters most for Myanmar is the need for genuine effort. Regardless of external forecasts, if the people remain committed and hardworking, we can defy these expectations and achieve real GDP growth.

He said that Myanmar has a lower GDP compared to other ASEAN nations and neighbouring countries, we must make every effort to strengthen the manufacturing sector to boost GDP. The Prime Minister noted that he recently attended the Fourth Europe-Asia Economic Forum (EEF 2025) held in Belarus. He highlighted that Belarus is a country with a strong agro-based industry. Its GDP stands at $73.1 billion, with agricultural exports generating between $6.8 billion and $8.2 billion. In contrast, Myanmar's agricultural exports amount to only about $4.8 billion – roughly half that of Belarus – underscoring the need to modernize our agricultural and livestock sectors.

He explained that beyond attending the forum, the visit provided an opportunity to closely study Belarus and its development strategies. Despite being smaller in both land area and population compared to Myanmar, Belarus has achieved a higher GDP. The country is recognized globally for its production and export of advanced agricultural machinery, a result of adopting modern farming practices and building strong export capacity. In the livestock sector, Belarus also excels. It raises dairy cattle using modern equipment and technologies to produce and export a wide range of dairy products – an area from which Myanmar could draw valuable lessons. Similarly, during his visit to the Republic of Buryatia in the Russian Federation, It was observed that they are using modern techniques in local livestock farming, including the breeding of purebred animals and the export of high-quality meat. If Myanmar adopt similar production methods and make use of the strong foundations already present in our country, while implementing these practices in a systematic and organized way, it can also achieve success in its agricultural and livestock sectors, just as they have.

Our country currently has a national rice self-sufficiency rate of around 170 per cent. However, there are still some regions and states that have not yet achieved self-sufficiency in rice production. By cultivating systematically and improving crop yields in line with set goals and objectives, it is possible to attain rice self-sufficiency in each region and state.

It has been observed that Chin State, Taninthayi Region, Magway Region, Mandalay Region, Yangon Region, and Shan State are not yet self-sufficient in rice. If the targeted objectives are successfully met in these areas, all regions and states, except for Chin State and Mandalay Region, can reach rice self-sufficiency. Moreover, if the country can produce high-quality rice for export, it would generate increased foreign income. Therefore, we must continue working to enhance agricultural productivity.

In the rice cultivation efforts across various regions and states, authorities have encouraged the use of seed planting and rice transplanters, and there has been noticeable improvement in these practices. To further enhance productivity, it is important to maintain proper row spacing and ensure grow healthily and increase yields. For this, it is essential to cultivate crops systematically to ensure they thrive and reach their full potential.

In addition to increasing crop yields, it is also important to expand the cultivated area and promote multiple cropping practices. During the 2022-2023 period, the total rice cultivation area was 17 million acres, including 15 million acres of primary cultivation, 2.24 million acres of multi-cropping, and 28,000 acres of intercropping.

Currently, there are 7.33 million acres of farmland where only a single crop is grown throughout the year. Cultivating rice or other suitable crops on these lands would bring significant benefits. Across the country, there are approximately 20 million acres of farmland used for single-crop cultivation annually.

Regions and states must take concrete steps to ensure the success of agricultural activities. To achieve agricultural goals, it is essential to begin with systematic planting, using high-yielding seed varieties, applying appropriate fertilizers, and improving soil quality. Additionally, measures must be taken to ensure a reliable water supply for agriculture. The government committed to making agricultural activities successful, and also urge the chief ministers of all regions and states to prioritize the development and success of agriculture and livestock-related enterprises during their terms in office, except for cases impacted by natural disasters. He emphasized that ensuring the success of agriculture-based businesses should remain a key priority of the government.

There have been reports indicating a rise in Myanmar's poverty index. Generally, poverty can be caused by two main factors: the failure of businesses and the impact of natural disasters. In our country, around 70 per cent of the population lives in rural areas, while the remaining 30 per cent reside in urban centres. Of the total population, more than half are engaged in agriculture and forestry in some capacity. Therefore, if the country can successfully implement agriculture and livestock initiatives – the primary livelihoods of rural communities – it will make a significant contribution to poverty reduction. These efforts must be carried out with care and a genuine sense of responsibility to ensure their success. In addition to agriculture, livestock development must also be prioritized. Myanmar has the potential to successfully raise chickens, pigs, goats, sheep, cattle, and fish across all regions of the country. Expanding both agricultural and livestock activities is essential to meet the daily nutritional needs of the population, such as meat, fish, eggs, and fruits, while also boosting local economies.

By doing so, the socio-economic conditions of rural communities will improve. Since agriculture and livestock are primarily rural-based, increasing productivity in these sectors will raise rural incomes and help reduce poverty indicators nationwide.

Since around 2021, we have been providing support for micro, small and medium enterprises (MSMEs) based on agricultural and livestock products. At present, it can be observed that many of these enterprises are operating successfully to a certain extent.

Looking globally, it is evident that MSMEs are being encouraged and promoted. When we look at the MSMEs in our own country, we find that the majority are involved in the production of food and beverage products. Therefore, it is necessary to increase the production of goods that can enter wider markets, such as industrial products and agricultural machinery and equipment.

In manufacturing, some products require labour to produce, as well as others can be made using natural resources. For example, with bamboo, which grows naturally in the environment, it is possible to produce a wide variety of goods. If used effectively and profitably, such products could generate substantial national income. Hence, attention should be drawn to this opportunity.

Regarding crops, there are approximately 500,000 acres of cotton plantations. If cotton-based industrial enterprises are promoted, this could greatly contribute to national economic development. Cotton is a crop with strong potential for supporting the country's development and should be supported and expanded.

Therefore, cotton and bamboo should be prioritized and developed as key industries to boost the national economy.

Support is being provided to micro, small, and medium enterprises (MSMEs) with the objectives of replacing imported goods, strengthening the domestic economy, producing high-quality products for export, and generating foreign income.

In operating MSMEs, access to raw materials is of primary importance. Therefore, priority is being given to MSMEs that are based on regionally produced raw materials. At the same time, it is necessary to ensure the adequate supply of critical imports such as fertilizers, pesticides, fuel for machinery, and electricity.

In addition to financial capital, it is also essential to have sufficient and skilled human resources. During recent visits to MSMEs across the country, reports were received regarding shortages of labour. As a result, in 2024, a request was made to compile a list of the working-age population based on the country's total population.

According to available data, the estimated number of people of working age (those aged between 15 and 65) is approximately 34.806 million. Of these, around 19.141 million are engaged in some form of employment. There are over 1 million civil servants, approximately 140,000 university students, and around 17.13 million people registered and working as labourers domestically and abroad. Although the country possesses a substantial labour force, there is a need to make more effective use of this potential. While Myanmar already has favourable land and conditions for employment, there is still a need to create real job opportunities.

To this end, the government has allocated funds from the National Economic Promotion Fund to regions and states. Additional funding is being provided as necessary. The government will also continue to supply the required investment and technology. What is most important, however, is that people must truly be willing to work.

The World Bank has assessed that Myanmar's Gross Domestic Product (GDP)

may decline due to disruptions in production caused by ongoing conflicts within the country, and due to damage sustained by economic activities following the recent major earthquake in Mandalay.

In response, we have included in our post-earthquake recovery plans measures to provide low-interest investment funding to help economic activities resume as quickly as possible.

We are fully committed to making every effort to restore the national economy, which has been adversely affected. We will support the development of manufacturing industries and provide necessary encouragement to those who wish to contribute to the country's economic growth.

It is our firm belief that if such efforts are carried out effectively, the national economy will have the potential to recover and improve.

Following that, in connection with national economic development, the Union Minister for Planning and Finance provided explanations regarding the financial status of the Union Government, including annual budget estimates by financial year, the use of emergency funds in response to natural disasters, and contributions made to the National Disaster Management Fund.

He also discussed the preparation of the Union Budget Estimate for the 2025–2026 financial year; consumer price inflation and monetary inflation rates; the expenditure and remaining balance of the MSME Development Fund; the establishment and additional capital inflow of the National Economic Promotion Fund, and distributions made to regions and states.

The Union Minister for Agriculture, Livestock and Irrigation explained the progress in the agricultural and livestock sectors, and the development of manufacturing industries based on those sectors. He also shared findings from the study of export and import volumes, as well as revenue and expenditure figures from financial years 2020–2021 to 2024–2025. Comparative observations regarding the production and export volumes of neighbouring countries were also presented.

The Union Minister for Energy outlined the ministry's ongoing efforts in the energy sector to support national economic development. He explained the current initiatives to reduce reliance on imported petroleum products, to locally produce and use high-grade fuels, and the benefits of doing so. Measures to reduce imports of fertilizers were also being implemented. In addition, he highlighted key fundamental measures being taken to improve the energy sector.

The Union Minister for Industry presented on the formation of committees and commissions dedicated to the development of the industrial sector and MSME manufacturing businesses. He discussed the organization of MSME product exhibitions, efforts to ensure the local production of high-quality iron and steel for the construction industry, and plans to maximize the output of cement factories.

He further explained ongoing activities for the development of industries and industrial zones, promotion of manufacturing enterprises, the increasing production of pharmaceuticals, and the production performance of state-owned factories by financial year.

Afterwards, those attending the meeting held discussions and presented their views on matters relating to the country's economic development.

In response to the presentations, the Chairman of the State Administration Council and Prime Minister stated that it is necessary to ensure sufficient domestic production of the medicines most needed in the country.

He added that in supporting MSMEs, priority should be given to using locally available raw materials to produce improved goods that can also be increasingly exported abroad.

He also stressed that in carrying out manufacturing activities, emphasis should be placed on producing quality products in large quantities that meet market demands, so they can be sold successfully.

Afterwards, in his concluding remarks, the Chairman of the State Administration Council and Prime Minister stated that the matters discussed were productive and constructive.

He noted that the government is currently working towards the development of the national economy and the reduction of commodity prices. He emphasized that while there are matters that require long-term efforts, there are also issues that must be addressed and resolved immediately.

He highlighted the need to prioritize economic development in the short term and called for improvements in the manufacturing sector. He added that necessary support should be provided as much as possible to meet the requirements for implementing these activities.

Furthermore, he pointed out that, through conducting research and studies, it would be possible to enhance and improve business operations more effectively.

In carrying out agricultural activities, it is necessary to conduct research aimed at cultivating high-yield and high-quality crop varieties that are suited to the current conditions. Efforts should also be made to achieve wheat sufficiency across all regions and states.

As maize production is also a national necessity, it is important to produce high-quality maize as a raw material so that value-added maize-based products can be manufactured domestically and exported.

Enhancing the cultivation and production of oil crops such as sunflower will greatly contribute to domestic oil sufficiency.

It is also necessary to research to ensure high-quality cultivation of fruit crops that thrive in Myanmar, such as Myanmar durian and Sein Ta Lone mangoes. Cultivating crops according to zones that match the local conditions will enable the production of large quantities of high-quality produce in concentrated areas.

Furthermore, improving the cultivation of kitchen crops such as onions, garlic, potatoes, and other essential vegetables will directly benefit farmers.

Research activities will lead to improvements in the cultivation of crops that are essential to the nation and will greatly contribute to national economic development.

Similarly, in the area of livestock breeding, the raising of indigenous poultry already has both domestic and international market potential, and the required animal feed can be sufficiently sourced within the country.

Research should also be carried out concerning the breeding of animals such as chickens, ducks, pigs, goats, cattle, fish, and prawns in order to help improve domestic livestock production. In addition, support should be provided to those engaged in livestock farming.

If we are able to further develop agricultural and livestock-based production industries to ensure domestic sufficiency and increase exports, this will provide considerable support to national economic growth.

However, it was also noted that illegal trade and unauthorized extraction of natural resources in border areas continue to cause serious harm to the nation. Therefore, regional and state governments must take systematic action to strictly control and prevent such activities.

The meeting concluded in the evening after the discussions. It was attended by members of the Council, Union ministers, the chairman of the Nay Pyi Taw Council, deputy ministers, and departmental officials, while chief ministers from various regions and states joined via videoconference. — MNA/KNN/TH

Rehab efforts beefed up in quake-stricken areas

Rehabilitation efforts are ongoing in Sagaing and Mandalay.

PEOPLE, together with members from relevant organizations, participate in rehabilitation efforts in damaged areas caused by the Mandalay earthquake. Yesterday, Sagaing Region Chief Minister U Myat Kyaw and Lt-Gen Thet Pon from the Office of the Commander-in-Chief (Army) observed the clearing of debris at the religious sites in Sagaing, and the land area to reconstruct the Maha Zedihla Pagoda severely destroyed by the quake, and the renovation of Mahiyangana and Laykyun Mahnaung pagodas. Enhance the empowerment of women with gender equality

MYANMAR'S history reflects the significant contributions of women in political, economic, social, and cultural arenas. From past to present, Myanmar women have actively participated in nation-building, development projects, and defence duty alongside men.

Despite these contributions, women have historically faced unequal rights in sectors such as politics, economics, education, healthcare, and social affairs. Discrimination and gender-based violence have further hindered their progress. Recognizing these challenges, efforts to promote gender equality and protect women's rights have been initiated across the country. The UN Charter affirms equal rights for men and women, yet many women around the world, including in Myanmar, still lack access to these rights.

In recognition of women's role in national development, the Myanmar National Committee on Women's Affairs was established on 3 July 1996. Since then, 3 July has been observed annually as Myanmar Women's Day. One of the Committee's primary goals is to empower women and enhance their capabilities to become a reliable force in the country's progress.

The government has taken steps to ensure gender equality, as outlined in the Constitution of the nation. Section 348 declares that the Union shall not discriminate against any citizen of the Republic of the Union of Myanmar, based on race, birth, religion, official position, status, culture, sex and wealth. Similarly, Section 350 guarantees that women shall be entitled to the same rights and salaries as those received by men in respect of similar work.

Educational statistics reveal a mixed picture. While 51 per cent of females completed primary education compared to 42.3 per cent of males, only 18.8 per cent of females reached middle school and 11.7 per cent completed high school, trailing their male counterparts. However, a higher percentage of women (12.9 per cent) reached university compared to men (9.7 per cent). This indicates the need to further enhance women's educational opportunities, especially at the secondary level.

Currently, women make up 50.76 per cent of basic education students and 63.60 per cent of those in higher education. They account for 47.19 per cent of the science and technology field and 70.44 per cent of those in related educational sectors. Notably, in the 2023-2024 academic year, girls achieved a 64.31 per cent pass rate in the matriculation exam.

To build on this progress, all ministries and relevant organizations are urged to take active roles in implementing the 12 priority tasks outlined in the National Strategic Plan for the Advancement of Women (2023-2032), based on the Beijing Platform for Action and the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women.

Young Asians are learning to honour their heritage while redefining success on their own terms, merging Eastern endurance with Western individuality. ILLUSTRATION: STORY.COM

IN A world that is becoming increasingly loud, fast, and self-centred, there is a quiet strength that often goes unnoticed — consideration. Not the kind that simply says “thank you” and “excuse me”, but the kind that genuinely thinks of others before speaking, acting, or reacting. This kind of consideration is not just about manners. It is the culture of the heart — the emotional politeness that reveals who we truly are beneath our words and actions.

True consideration begins with empathy. It springs from the deep, quiet well of compassion. It is found in people who don't just live for themselves, who aren't driven by ego, and who don't always place their own comfort and desires first. Considerate people are those who think: “How would this feel if it happened to me?” or “Would I like to be treated this way?” They don't make everything about themselves. They don't seek the spotlight, but they bring light wherever they go.

When someone thinks, “I don't like this behaviour, so maybe others won't either,” and adjusts themselves — that is consideration. When someone reflects, “I enjoy this small pleasure, perhaps someone else would too,” and chooses to share it, that is also consideration. These moments may be small, almost invisible, but they are what make us feel seen, respected, and valued as human beings.

Consideration is never loud. It doesn't announce itself. But it is deeply felt. People with considerate hearts tend to be graceful, emotionally mature, and culturally rich — not because of wealth or education, but because they carry a genuine warmth within. That's why others naturally feel drawn to them.

On the other hand, we all have encountered people who believe the world revolves around them. They say things like, “It's none of my business,” or “I'll do whatever I want,” or “I don't care what others think”. These individuals live in a bubble of self-interest. They don't realize it, but their behaviour often sends the wrong signal, turning away the very people they wish would draw closer. Eventually, people sigh in frustration, avoid eye contact, or distance themselves — not because they hate, but because they are emotionally exhausted.

A lack of consideration shows in many ways. Think of someone shouting and talking loudly in a quiet room, cutting lines in public places, asking overly personal or inappropriate questions, or demanding something from others without knowing whether it's convenient or welcome. These behaviours speak loudly of emotional immaturity and a lack of awareness. They are not harmless quirks — they are signals that someone hasn't developed the soft skills that bind society together.

Yet, being considerate is not difficult. It's found in small choices. It's in the way we look at someone's face and wonder how we might ease their discomfort. It's in the words we choose when someone is hurting or struggling. It's in knowing when to step forward and help — and just as importantly, when to quietly step back.

There is power in not doing what shouldn't be done. Consider-

Roots and Wings: The Quiet Strength of Young Asians in a Noisy World

By Khin Maung Myint

Preamble

This reflection captures the essence of traditional Asian values and their quiet yet powerful form of strength. When placed in the context of the younger generation of Asians growing up in the Western world, it takes on added layers of complexity, resilience, and transformation.

Whispers of Strength in a Louder World

For young Asians raised in the West — children of immigrants or those born into diasporic communities — strength often wears many faces. Yes, it still whispers through discipline, perseverance, and deference, but it also must learn to speak up, to navigate cultures that value expression, autonomy, and visibility.

In Western classrooms, where individuality is often prized over conformity, many young Asians juggle dual expectations: the silent grind expected at home and the confident self-advocacy celebrated at school. The phrase “Dripping water hollows stone” still echoes — but now, the drip has to find its rhythm between two cultural worlds.

The Silent Curriculum: Discipline and Duty

Asian families in the West continue to carry forward a deep respect for education, but here, it's often interpreted differently. To Western peers, success might seem like overachievement — violin lessons, perfect grades, coding at age 10. But behind this is an unspoken narrative: to honour the sacrifices of parents who came with little, to carry forward centuries of values in a land that often doesn't fully understand them.

Education becomes not just an academic pursuit but a moral mission, where discipline is a birthright, not a burden. This can lead to quiet but fierce resilience — the kind that keeps going when no one's watching, the kind that measures progress in small, daily victories.

Bicultural Brains, Multilingual Minds

Growing up in homes where English blends with Cantonese, Urdu, Tagalog, Tamil, Burmese, or Korean, young Asians develop more than just bilingual skills — they build mental flexibility. This mental code-switching doesn't just help in conversations; it translates to a more adaptive mindset, one that can switch between worldviews, navigate nuance, and read the unspoken, crucial skills in a multicultural world.

The Pressure Paradox

High expectations — from family and community — can be both a torch and a weight. Many young Asians in the West feel caught between wanting to meet those expectations and yearning to explore paths less “acceptable” to tradition (like art, activism, or unconventional careers). This creates internal conflict, but also rich soil for growth, where identity is self-forged, not just inherited.

They are learning to blend Eastern endurance with Western self-expression, to be strong not just in silence but also in story, advocacy, and leadership.

Where Growth Truly Happens

So, what happens when bamboo is planted in different soil? It doesn't just bend or break — it adapts. It might grow with new shoots, different leaves, or in unexpected directions, but it still carries the strength of its roots.

For young Asians in the West, success isn't just survival or assimilation. It's synthesis. It's saying: “I carry the quiet strength of my ancestors, but I also find new ways to speak it.”

In Summary

- Hard work, family honour, and persistence are still foundational values — but they must coexist with individualism, freedom of expression, and evolving identity.
- Multilingual and multicultural upbringing sharpen cognitive and emotional flexibility.
- The pressure to excel is real, but it is slowly transforming into a desire to redefine excellence on one's own terms.
- The new Asian generation is learning to nurture intelligence and wisdom, both through heritage and choice.

And in that delicate balance, a new kind of strength is blooming — still quiet at times, but also learning to roar when it needs to.

The Soft Strength That Shapes Humanity

By Laura Htet (UDE)

Considerate individuals prioritize the feelings of others, making small yet impactful choices that nurture relationships. ILLUSTRATION: FREEPIK ation includes restraint. It's about choosing not to boast in front of someone grieving, not to eat lavishly in front of someone who is hungry, not to show off success in front of someone who is going through a rough patch. These are simple yet profound acts of emotional intelligence. They may seem small, but to the one receiving them, they can mean everything.

And then there are moments when kindness flows not from what we hold back, but from what we give. When we eat something delicious and suddenly think, ‘My friend would love this — I should get one for her,’ that simple thought becomes a beautiful act of kindness born from genuine care. Even though it costs us little, the joy it brings to someone else is deeply meaningful. Similarly, when we cook something delicious at home and remember to share with our neighbours, that thoughtfulness doesn't just feed stomachs — it nurtures connections.

The way someone remembers what we love, even the smallest detail, and then acts on it — that kind of thoughtfulness quietly settles into our memory and never really leaves. It's not the gift that matters, but the thought behind it. That's the magic of consideration. It turns ordinary moments into something tender and unforgettable.

Sometimes, the deepest form of consideration isn't in what we do, but in what we choose not to do. It's about holding back, preserving dignity, and protecting the emotional space of others. For instance, imagine someone who has just faced a personal loss, and someone else is laughing or celebrating loudly in front of them. That lack of emotional awareness can wound more deeply than we realize. Or imagine someone who is struggling financially, and someone brags excessively about their latest purchases in front of them. These things might be unintentional, but they reveal how little we think about others' emotional realities. And yet, when someone chooses silence over showiness, chooses sensitivity over selfishness — that is when their humanity shines.

15th homage ceremony for veteran comedians to uphold tradition in Yangon

THE Myanmar Comedians Association will hold its 15th annual homage ceremony for senior veteran comedians as part of its long-standing tradition, according to U Dain Dawng, comedian and chairman of the association's central executive committee.

The event is scheduled to take place on 7 July at the association's Yangon Region office, located within the Mibakyeyzusek Pagoda compound in Ward 48, Dagon Myothit (North) Township, Yangon Region.

"There are challenges with organizing the event this year. To be honest, things haven't gone smoothly. We feel sorry for asking donors for support during a time when much of the country's focus is on earthquake recovery efforts. The biggest challenge is funding. Organizing in Nay Pyi Taw is difficult due to travel issues, so we decided to host it in Yangon, where transportation and accommodation are easier," U Dain Dawng explained.

He added that this year, the association aims to support the honoured seniors not only through the homage ceremony but also by planting medicinal fund trees and monthly donations. "I plan to contribute as much as I can," he said.

Vietnam's coffee exports reach record high in H1

VIETNAM'S coffee exports reached a record high of 5.5 billion US dollars in the first half of 2025, surpassing the full-year target of 5.4 billion dollars, the Ministry of Agriculture and Environment said on Wednesday.

The sharp rise in export value was driven by strong demand from major markets including the United States, the European Union, Japan, South Korea, and China.

The ministry attributed the record performance to a shift towards high-value coffee products, such as deeply processed coffee, specialty coffee, and instant coffee.

Vietnam's coffee export revenue is projected to reach 7.5 billion dollars by the end of this year, up around 37 per cent from 2024, marking the highest annual growth on record for the country's coffee industry, according to the ministry. — Xinhua

This quality of being considerate is not limited to strangers. It is most beautiful when practised in our closest relationships. Between parents and children, between spouses, among friends and siblings — consideration is the emotional glue that holds these bonds together.

It's often within these familiar relationships that our kindness carries the most weight. When children grow up and begin to notice that their ageing parents are becoming more emotionally sensitive, they realize the importance of being thoughtful. As parents grow older, they may feel lonelier, less strong, and more vulnerable. They need their children not just for financial support, but emotional companionship. Listening to them with attention, taking them out to peaceful places like temples or parks, cooking food they love, involving them in simple family rituals — all of these actions say, "I see you. I value you. You still matter."

Consideration within a marriage is just as essential. A spouse who notices what the other needs, who remembers what they love, who offers help without being asked, brings not just comfort, but peace to the home. Imagine a wife who is cooking while her husband quietly helps wash the dishes — not because he was told to, but because he notices she's tired. Imagine a husband who carries the groceries every time they shop together — not as a duty, but as a natural response to love. These gestures may not make headlines, but they build lifelong bonds.

Even among siblings or close friends, consideration shines through. It's in how we speak. Even if we're close, we should always be mindful of which words to use and which to avoid. Closeness is never a license to be careless. Respect and boundaries matter, even in intimacy. When a friend is going through something, being there in silence can sometimes be more supportive than flooding them with advice. When they don't need us, giving them space is just as valuable as showing up when they do. These aren't rules written in stone, but principles etched in the heart. Consideration is about emotional alignment — it's about holding space for others, gently and quietly.

The beauty of consideration lies in its subtlety. It's not always about grand gestures. It's in remembering someone's favourite dish. It's about waiting patiently in line. It's in staying quiet when words might wound. It's in speaking up when silence might hurt. It's in all the small choices we make each day to make life just a little more bearable for someone else.

The best part? Anyone can practice it. We don't need wealth, beauty, or brilliance to be considerate. All we need is the willingness to care, the courage to pause, and the humility to think beyond ourselves.

So, let's carry this gentle power with us. Let's be the person who brings ease into a room. Let's be the one who thinks of others even when we don't have to. Let's teach our children not just to chase success, but to honour kindness. Let's be quiet listeners, warm helpers, and gentle souls in a world that so desperately needs softness. Because in the end, what people remember is not how loud we were, how successful we looked, or how much we had — but how we made them feel. And if we can leave behind a trace of warmth, a ripple of comfort, and the memory of being deeply understood, then we have lived a life not just successful, but meaningful.

THAILAND'S acting prime minister is set to helm the country for only one full day Wednesday, standing in for suspended premier Paetongtarn Shinawatra before being replaced himself in a cabinet reshuffle.

Transport minister and deputy prime minister Suriya Jungrungreangkit began his engagements by attending a ceremony in Bangkok celebrating the longevity of the prime minister's office.

The event marked the 93rd anniversary of an institution Suriya is set to command for far fewer than 93 hours as Thailand reels from the suspension of Paetongtarn, heiress of the country's dominant political dynasty. During a brief ceremony open to media Suriya declined to respond to queries asking how he felt about his ephemeral leadership, which caps a decades-long political career.

He said his most urgent business had been to "sign a paper" ensuring a smooth transition to his successor on Thursday. — AFP

Trump threatens Musk with deportation amid ongoing feud

US President Donald Trump said Tuesday the White House will have to examine the possibility of deporting Elon Musk, after the billionaire entrepreneur blasted the president's tax and spending bill.

Musk, who originally hails from South Africa and is now a US citizen, posted several posts of criticism over the weekend on social media aimed at Trump's "big, beautiful bill".

The tech titan lambasted the bill for what he said was adding to the US debt. Trump jabbed back on Tuesday, posting on social media that Musk, who is the CEO of electric vehicle company Tesla, was upset that the legislation eliminated tax credits for electric vehicles.

This is the latest in a row between the two billionaires, with the two in a tit-for-tat war of words. — Xinhua

Myanmar's AFC hopes dim after 2-1 loss to Bangladesh

MYANMAR'S hopes of qualifying for the 2026 AFC Women's Asian Cup took a heavy blow after a 2-1 defeat to Bangladesh on 2 July at Thuwunna Stadium in Yangon.

The match was crucial for both teams, with only the top team in the group moving forward. Myanmar came in strong after beating Turkmenistan 8-0, while Bangladesh had defeated Bahrain 7-0. But it was Bangladesh who came out on top in this key battle.

Myanmar head coach Yuki Tatsuro made surprising decisions – leaving top striker Win Theingi Htun out of the starting eleven and making few changes even when the team was behind. The line-up was changed from the one that had performed well in the first match, and it showed.

Bangladesh focused their attacks on both wings, and Myanmar struggled to stop them. Ritu Chakma scored the opener in 19 minutes. In the second half, Myanmar brought on May Htet Lu and Win Win to push forward, but Bangladesh stayed strong at the back. Ritu Chakma struck again in 72 minutes, making it 2-0. Win Win scored a late goal in 88 minutes, but it was too little, too late. Bangladesh held on for the win.

Myanmar's performance lacked energy and teamwork. They had few chances in the first half, and even their best shot – a free-kick from Khin Moe Moe Htun – went wide. Bangladesh played in good shape and control, making life hard for the home side.

Myanmar still have one match left against Bahrain on 5 July. Bangladesh will play Turkmenistan on the same day. Only if Bangladesh lose or draws, and Myanmar win big, can Myanmar still hope to qualify — but the chances are now very slim. — Ko Nyi Lay/KZL

Gonzalo heads Real Madrid past Juventus and into Club World Cup quarters

GONZALO Garcia's 54th-minute header was enough to give Real Madrid a 1-0 win over Juventus at Hard Rock Stadium on Tuesday and book their place in the quarterfinals of the Club World Cup.

The Spanish giants will face the winner of Tuesday's other game between Borussia Dortmund and Mexico's Monterrey in the last eight.

It was an impressive display from Xabi Alonso's Madrid side and adding to a positive day, Kylian Mbappe made his return from illness, coming on as a 68th-minute substitute for his first appearance of the tournament.

The first half was a finely-balanced contest with Igor Tudor's Juventus starting brightly before Real ended it on top.

There was an early chance for Juve's Randal Kolo Muani after clever work from Kenan Yildiz to put him through on goal, but the French forward opted for an attempted chip of Thibaut Courtois and his shot floated over the bar.

The impressive Yildiz then burst through the middle and unleashed a fierce effort which deflected off Aurelien Tchouameni and flew wide. — AFP

Liverpool defender Quansah signs for Bayer Leverkusen

CENTRE-HALF Jarell Quansah has joined Bayer Leverkusen from Premier League champions Liverpool for a reported club record fee, the Bundesliga side announced on Wednesday.

According to British and German press, the transfer fee for the 22-year-old could go up to 40 million euros ($47 million), including 10 million euros in add-ons. German specialist media Kicker and The Athletic also reported the inclusion of a 60-million-euros buy-back clause in the contract, which Liverpool could activate from summer 2027 to re-sign Quansah.

"We are very happy to be able to sign Jarell Quansah, one of the most promising English central defenders," said Leverkusen managing director of sport Simon Rolfes.

"He made a very impressive contribution to a Liverpool defence full of world-class players. Jarell will give our defence extra dynamism, tempo and strength."

Quansah becomes the most expensive signing in Leverkusen's history, following on from the previous record arrival of midfielder Kerem Demirbay for 32 million euros in 2019.

Alcaraz aims to avoid giant-killing after Wimbledon seeds tumble

CARLOS Alcaraz will aim to avoid one of Wimbledon's greatest upsets against British amateur Oliver Tarvet on Wednesday after a record-breaking number of seeds crashed out at the All England Club.

Two days of searing temperatures in London were already forgotten as play on the outside courts was delayed by persistent drizzle.

But the rain will not hinder defending champion Alcaraz in his second-round match against Tarvet on the covered Centre Court.

Their contest will follow the match between women's world number one Aryna Sabalenka and Marie Bouzkova of the Czech Republic.

Settlement in national currencies on BRICS agenda

As anticipation builds for the upcoming BRICS Summit scheduled for 6-7 July, Brazilian academic Lier Pires Ferreira has outlined the forum's key focus areas. Speaking to Toda Palavra, a media partner of TV BRICS, the professor from the BRICS Research Centre at the Federal University of Fluminense described the outlook as "favourable", highlighting that the meeting will address major political, economic, and social priorities shared by member states.

From a political perspective, Ferreira said the summit will underline the importance of safeguarding multilateralism and reforming global governance. He noted that the BRICS bloc is expected to push for broader participation from countries in the Global South in international decision-making forums, an effort aimed at creating a more balanced world order. On the economic front, a significant portion of the agenda will revolve around expanding mutual trade using national currencies. Ferreira observed that this shift away from dollar dependency aligns with long-standing efforts to strengthen intra-BRICS economic cooperation. Sustainable development and deeper energy integration, already embedded in the group's investment roadmap, are also likely to gain renewed momentum, as reported by TV BRICS. — ANI
